Muskrat
Farms Are Now Becoming Very Popular in Some Sections

What's the matter with starting a muskrat farm, boys? The Department of Agriculture says it will pay. Up East, in New York state and several others, such farms have already been started in favored locations. Near a river, creek or any small stream rats can be bred in great numbers. The muskrat pelt has recently become very valuable both in America and abroad. They are used to make fur coats, caps, stoles, muffs and the like. The Lexington firm of Speyer & Son handled 50,000 muskrat skins during the year 1909, according to a statement of a member of the firm a few days ago. The firm collected them from several surrounding states, paid from 25 to 50 cents apiece for them. They were all shipped to Europe. "Ten years ago," said Mr. Speyer to Lexington Herald, "we paid five, ten and fifteen cents for muskrat skins. Now we pay thirty-five, forty and fifty cents, according to quality and size. If the demand increases we may have to pay more." The Herald is informed that one negro in a surrounding county started a skunk farm a year or so ago and he now brings in many of these hides. Last year he is said to have made a good deal of money out of his enterprise. All were bought by Lexington firms and shipped away. Muskrats are said to be very prolific. They multiply so rapidly that if properly cared for they can be made very profitable. Every farm boy reader of The Herald might look into this matter.
